NEW YORK TIMES VOCABULARY LOG

Directions: Use The New York Times to learn vocabulary by choosing articles that interest you and keeping a log of the words you learn as you go. After writing in the word and the headline and date of the article in which you found it, copy out the sentence in which you read it (context), and make a guess as to what it could mean from that context. Then find the dictionary definition that best fits its use here. Finally, either write your own new sentence that uses the word, or create a drawing or diagram that depicts it and will help you remember it.
